ONE ON HAWKINS—A. S. Hawkins, who is at present somewhat lame from a surgical operation, and who uses a crutch, tells a good joke on himself as follows: Today while out seeing the voters, and talking up my candidacy, I approached a stranger and offering him one of my cards, was somewhat surprised to hear him say, "I can do nothing for you." Thinking I had perhaps found a supporter of one of my opponents, I said "Why?" His reply was, "because of hard times. I have been up against it myself." At this juncture, I realized that he took me for a mendicant soliciting alms. I made haste to assure him that he was mistaken in the kind of help I needed, at this time, but the crowd seemed to enjoy the joke at my expense.

COUNTY FAIR IS NOW

B. Ward on the life of the boy and girl on the farm; Hubert W. Clark on the prehistoric irrigation systems in this section; and Mrs. H. D. Ross, president of the Arizona State Federation of Woman's Clubs, on the value of the woman's clubs to the community.

The judging, which itself was a big task, began as soon after noon as possible and continued for the rest of the day. The complete list of prizes to date is published below. Prof. Lawrence, of the agricultural department of the university, did the bulk of this work.

Gov. Hunt's Address
Better organization among agriculturists, the construction of better highways, and more direct and efficient service through the schools and university extension work were among the recommendations of Gov. Hunt, who delivered an address on "Rural Life." The governor said in part:

"Coincident with advances in agricultural industries, better educational facilities and greater opportunities for social advantages have been created so that rural life today is not the dull, colorless round of drudgery and routine which drove the country boy of a few decades ago to fare forth into cities in search of congenial employment.

"But, despite all these improvements in country conditions, much still remains to be done before the youth of country districts shall enjoy equal advantages with young people living in cities. It has frequently been said that no millionaires are made in farming as an occupation. The truth of this statement cannot be denied indicating a marked disparity between the business advantages provided for the city man and the farmer, respectively. If any one deficiency may be held responsible for this condition, it is the absence of an efficient working organization among the agriculturists of this country. Whereas, for many years, city workers and business interests of diverse kinds have been compactly organized for the purpose of emphasizing their needs and insisting upon fair treatment, the farmers of the United States, on the other hand, have only recently come to realize the advantages that lie in organization. With this realization there has come about a determined and intelligent effort on the part of our horticulturists, agriculturists and stock raisers, not only toward the securing of better business relations, but also toward the obtaining and realization of better opportunities for general education and for the establishing of such social activities as will render the rural community a better and more attractive place to live in. School houses have been converted into social centers, and in certain instances, neighborhood houses have been constructed with a view to affording a meeting place where all the diversified mental and moral interests of the community may find an open forum of expression.

"Gradually, but surely, the important relation of highway improvement to the development of the farm and farm home is being realized. Good roads are the arteries of trade, wherever they may be established. Not only do they afford the necessary transportation for the marketing of products, but they are also the lines of intimate communication and co-operation between different communities and families. Although the citizens of Arizona doubtless feel that they have already made great advances in highway construction, the possibilities, which the future holds in store, may be illustrated by the fact that France, a country with an area of forty thousand square miles less than that of the state of Texas, has a full half million miles of excellent highways and over twenty-five thousand miles of navigable waterways. The results, as may be anticipated, are intensified farming and a correspondingly greater rural population.

"Looking toward the future, the rural inhabitants of Arizona may find a great deal on which to base the most sanguine hopes of greater prosperity and comforts of living. There is every indication, judging by the sentiment of the people of this state and by the effort toward highway improvement, that Arizona will, in the course of the next ten years, have a highway system unexcelled by none that has been constructed in the more populous eastern states.

"Equally earnest attention is being devoted by Arizona's citizenship to the improvement and upbuilding of the public schools and institutions of higher learning. It is my personal hope that, as the years succeed one another, the public and normal schools, and the University of Arizona, will render a greater and more direct service to the young men and women who live in rural communities. Through university extension work a great deal of good is already being accomplished, and what has been done in the past along these lines may be regarded merely as a beginning of the task which lies before the educators of this state. I confidently expect to see the day when advanced instruction in certain courses will be at the service of every young man and woman who is prevented by circumstances, financial or otherwise, from leaving the home to attend the university or normal school. If the young people are unable to attend an educational institution of higher learning, it should be perfectly feasible to bring a part of the desired instruction to the rural community by holding night classes, or establishing short term courses of study under the direction of university professors, in neighborhood houses or in the ordinary cross roads school house. A step in this direction, and one calculated to directly benefit the agriculturists, is about to be undertaken by the University of Arizona under the beneficent provisions of the so-called Lever bill, by means of which the state may, upon requisition, obtain annually from the United States government a sum ranging upwards from $10,000 for the purpose of offering both young people and adults in farming communities such scientific agricultural instruction as they most desire to obtain. I may add, that in this praiseworthy movement the farm women of Arizona are not being forgotten, for it is highly probable that the university will devise a part of this work to meet the needs of the worthy women who constitute such a considerable and important element of our state's rural population."
